Someone does something for us We use we have + an object + a past fragment when we want to talk about something that someone else is doing for us, usually because we pay it, or because we are persuaded or asked to do so. Compare: We clean the house every Friday. (=clean it ourselves) We clean the house every Friday. (=someone else cleans it for us) The verb has no auxiliary verb in this structure. We must use or do for negative strikes and issues when there is no auxiliary verb. We don't usually have a painted house, we do it ourselves. We didn't paint the house. Did you paint the house? It looks great. Did you paint the house? We can use something that's made in every verb unnermoner. I'm going to cut my hair tomorrow. She's going to reusica the house. I changed the oil in the car. She cut her hair yesterday. The negative experiences we can use also have something to do with passive meaning when something bad happens to us. His wallet was stolen in Piccadilly. (=his wallet was stolen) They destroyed the house because of the fire. Do something in informal English, you can use get + object + past particles with the same meaning as they did something. I need to test my eyes. After the earthquake, they were given a renovated home. Her legs burned in the fire. (negative experiences) Let someone do something that we can use construction has + person + infinitiv with the same meaning as had something done, but in this case we mention the person who works something for us. The architect will Groundfloor. Susanne trimmed all the trees to her brother. Trees. someone to do something We can also use building get + someone + for+ infinitive to talk about someone who is doing something for us because we paid them, or because we asked or persuaded them to do so. But somebody should do something that often means the idea that you've persuaded someone to do something. The mechanic should take a look at the car. Tom's boss dragged him to a conference in Germany. Page 2 Check the answers to this exercise » Have got something done exercises.
